The Lord's Prayer !- Blessed be Him, who gave it as a perpetual fountain of life to the world; and blessed be the mother who teaches her children to lisp it with their first accents. How many millions have sat beside its "still water" in their childhood, and, from the inspiration of its pure wave, been enabled to overcome the temptation which have beset their path in after years. How much sin, how much crime, how much moral desolation ty, how much purity, how much verdure has it begotten ! As the kind mother gathered her little ones about her knees, on that evening, to hear them say their prayers, before retiring to rest, our eyes filled with tears from our childish recollections of one, who has been with the angels of God for nearly twenty years, and whose holy precepts will be foreyer engraven upon the tablet of our heart. We hope the reader will not think us egotistical, for we speak the experience of Millions, as well as our own-the prayer which she then taught us has beamed in our horizon, a cloud by day and a piller of fire by night; and we should have been saved many a bitter sigh it we had followed it more faithfully. Blessed be the mother, we repeat, who teaches it to her child. - J. S Chadbourne.

"Oh, sir-if I could but do so" ---"And thee would not return again?" "I would try to deserve better, sir." "Well, John, what would thee say if I should tell thee I had a pardon for thee?" "Oh, sir, such news would be too good."

"But thee would like to hear it?" "I care not for myself so much, (said the poor prisoner, and tears filled his eyes,) but for my wife and child, I would be happy" "And thee would shun wicked company,

"Oh, yes; and I would labor for my wife and little one" --

"Well, John here is thy pardon," continued the good old man; and he read the document, which freed this unfortunate being, who had been the dupe of other knaves. We had the pleasure of seeing him released after a three years' confinement, and of learning that tom he joined his young family, to whom he has since been a faithful guardian.
